THE WORK OF OBSERVERS.

While the proposition of the open door might have been thought of by the delegates at the Lausanne conference, it is quite certain that it would not have been presented there had it not been for the fact that the United States was represented through its observers.

The open door policy, giving equality of opportunity to all, is not new. It is, however, new to Turkey, the near east, and to the European countries in general. They know about it but they haven't been inclined to adopt or endorse it on their own initiative. There must have been considerable gasping when Ambassador Child presented it and there could have been any question among those countries that had been making separate agreements with the Ankara government that they were called upon to stand by or abandon their policies.

Great Britain through Lord Curzon hastens to state that it will accept the idea and in doing so will give up what ever rights it holds in the Mosul oil fields and join in with the others in replacing special privileges with equal rights. That the claim is made that the hold on the Mosul field is not a firm one need make no difference. Certainly the British had given no indication that they were going to abandon it until the proposition was made. It was not the British alone who obtained concessions or spheres of influence, in Asia Minor, France and Italy were included. What Ambassador Child had to say must have been thoroughly understood by them. With the British endorsement, and a partial approval by France, the indications are that the open door policy for Turkey has been presented in such a manner and at such a time that unlooked for results may come from Lausanne.

One interesting feature of this situation is that this development has come about and a laudable solution seems probable through the action of United States observers and not full fledged delegates. Those who have criticized this method of representation are doubtless giving serious attention to the work of the observers.

ANNAPOLIS AGAIN.

Some of the midshipmen at Annapolis have been in the limelight in an unfavorable manner of late because of a hearing that has been done there in spite of the attitude against it at the institution. Others promise to figure in quite as unfavorable light as the result of the investigation that seems likely to follow the spectacle that some of them made of themselves at Philadelphia following the football game between the army and navy last Saturday. Special privileges were granted to the midshipmen to go to the Quaker city and witness the game. It doesn't appear that they were told that all restrictions were removed and they could act as they pleased. As a matter of fact they, as future officers of the navy, are supposed to conduct themselves as gentlemen, and yet, if what was observed by officials and what was reported are considered, such doesn't appear to have been the case.

At the dance which had been arranged in the evening after the game at one of the hotels only a part of the midshipmen were present, but of that number it is indicated that a large number of them were intoxicated and conducting themselves in such a manner as to not only disgrace themselves, but the officers of the institution and the naval academy itself. It so happens that Secretary Denney of the navy department was where he could judge for himself. He saw with his own eyes and says "I think I know a drunken man or woman when I see one." It doesn't undertake to speak about other than what occurred in the ballroom of the hotel, but that apparently was enough.

It was evident that liquor was not only available for the midshipmen but many of them were much the worse for the use of it. Discipline was evidently cast to the winds. All were not guilty, but it seems likely that the bad judgment of those who were led resulted in all feeling the effects of it after the investigation has been completed. It is evident that it shows a tendency among a considerable number of those who are in line for future admiral's that can hardly be pleasing to the naval academy or the war department.

KIDNED FOR BUSINESS.

There have been times when the demands for passage were such that it was next to impossible to get early accommodations for a trip abroad. That fact has apparently subsided and with ships going only partly filled and still maintaining their fixed overhead expenses it is in keeping with the conditions that are usually taken to better conditions when a reduction in rates for transatlantic travel is announced.

Not all those who desire to travel are so fixed financially that they do not have to give some consideration to the traveling costs. It makes little difference what it is that is offered at a lower price, the fact that it is reduced invites and invariably increases business. This will doubtless prove to be true in connection with steamship travel.

restrictions in this country. Not as many can be brought here as in other years. Consequently steamer accommodations are more apt to remain unfilled than in days gone by, and in some instances steamship companies are converting such space to the uses of a different class.

Stimulation of business is what the steamship lines desire and that is what they are reaching out for when they present lower rates. It creates a revival of interest among those who have had European travel in mind, and doubtless hastens the decision of those who have been delaying decision until the funds have been raised to the needed amount, or who may not have seriously considered it before.

It apparently marks the beginning of the effort to get away from the wartime passenger rates, and a move that should do much to not only increase the receipts but possibly to bring into vessels which are now riding at anchor, of which there are a great number.

SOUTHERN DEMOCRATIC CONTROL.

What cannot fail to be regarded as a deplorable spectacle was the tactics resorted to by the democrats in the senate on Tuesday in conducting a filibuster against the anti-lynching bill and the frank announcement that they were not going to permit it to be considered.

This shows what southern domination will do and likewise makes it plain how thoroughly the policy of lynching has gripped that part of the country and through the influence which the representatives of the southern states exert, the democratic representatives in the upper house from other sections of the country.

Even though it has been repeatedly said that the mob rule manifested from time to time does not represent the sentiment of the better class of people in those states where it makes its appearance, some idea of what the sentiment is to be gained from the stand which is now being taken by southern senators against legislation of a character intended to correct it.

State after state has contributed to the long list of disgraceful acts which not only reflect upon the state but the nation as well. Rights which are assured individuals under the Constitution of the United States are absolutely and intentionally disregarded in the lynching states. The situation is one which calls for legislation giving the federal government the opportunity to step in and deal with such lawlessness. By the Dyer bill that would be possible, but that is just what the southern states do not want. They balk at the inference that would put a check upon the lynching of innocent men, or even restraining punishment until guilt could be proved and penalization could be authorized in a legal manner.

It is one of the national ills that calls for correction. The states where it flourishes balk at the thoughts of a cure. The opportunity to see what southern control in the ranks of the democrats means is strikingly presented.

GENERAL WOOD STICKS.

General Wood went to the Philippines for the purpose of straightening out the tangled conditions which had developed there. He made a thorough survey of the islands and determined what was needed to harmonize the interests and get the government on a sound basis. He went there at a time when it was anticipated he was to become provost of the University of Pennsylvania. That institution was quite as anxious for his services as was President Harding, but even yielded to national requirements, and even entered the time of holding open his position that he might complete the task he had undertaken.

It was fully expected that the first of the new year would see him back in this country and assuming his new office. Word from the Philippines, however, indicates that progress has not been made in keeping with his desires and it will be the last of February, or possibly later, before he will quit his present job. That means, if it means anything, that General Wood is determined to see his job carried through. He doesn't intend to desert his post in response to the governor's call and he has been satisfied that proper steps have been taken to meet the requirements of the conditions in the islands. Trouble has been occasioned to some extent by a deadlock that exists in the Philippine legislature. If the idea prevails there that delay is all that is necessary to prevent the legislation that is needed in the islands, and which the governor has called for, it should be removed by the expressed determination of General Wood to stick till the job is finished. That is what is apparently called for by the situation in the islands and there is nothing but commendation for the official who is prepared to meet it.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Wise are those who heed the appeals to shop early.

When Mr. Edison says college graduates don't like to work he is judging others by himself. That of course cannot be done.

Henceforth the train robbers may devote their attention to the coal trains in the west instead of the mail and express trains.

The man on the corner says: Probably the worst experiences the pedestrians have are from those things that never happen.

Those college graduates who are not working have been given something more by Thomas A. Edison to busy themselves with.

The proposed new third party might save a good purpose if some of the undesirable should jump into it and become submerged.

One reason why it doesn't seem like the Thanksgiving season is that wooden ash barrels can still be observed in many backyards.

Freemason on any question that is raised in congress is sure to be referred to as having been passed on by the voters at the last election.

With the former sultan of Turkey writing to his wives in Constantinople from Alaska the picture postcard business ought to prosper up a bit.

Clemenceau is getting attentive audiences and warm receptions but that doesn't change the viewpoint of Americans concerning America's duty to itself.

Finding it necessary to protect themselves somehow the railroads are bringing suits for damages against those who crash into trains at grade crossings.

KITCHEN TRAGEDY

"I shall never, never get over it," declared the desperate young creature in the gown embroidered in remarkable colors which nobody ever had known except Billy. "It was such a terrible thing. I adore awful things," gurgled her friend, who was cleaning out her top bureau drawer and found she had a life job of it.

"And I had been so careful with the stage settings," the despairing one confessed, dropping herself along a couch. "It's accessories which count and the scenery aids greatly in a man's state of mind."

"Right," said the friend, who had found holes in every one. "Particularly if it is breakfast with mushrooms. If I give Reginald steak and mushrooms he almost bursts into poetry and falls in love with me all over again."

"I got my idea when I dined and went to the theatre with Billy Bakerton," mused the remarkably embroidered one. "That delightful bachelor, who always looks so much like the waiter, was my seller. It is so interesting going out to dinner with Billy. He never looks over the bill of fare and murmurs, 'Well, let's see—what shall we have?' and discharges himself in mother always has a Sunday cake baked, and the family was going out, so—"

"Perfect!" agreed her friend. "But it's a cruel thing to wreck a bachelor's life!"

"I found I had kind of forgotten about the biscuit at first and I expect it made me really nervous, especially as Billy was in the kitchen fussing around making salad dressing and admiring my housewifely appearance in that $10 art apron. And there being no chart of the pantry I had some difficulty finding where the supplies were, but at last I located them in a big bag on the floor and the baking powder in another bag on the shelf where all the little things were. The oven was red hot but I had the biscuit mixed and popped in and maybe I wasn't glad to see the hateful things disappear for a few minutes."

"Billy said he was perfectly amazed and delighted to find a modern girl who really cared about cooking and what a lonesome life a bachelor did lead, to be sure, and oh, how he did anticipate meeting those biscuits back to back in the table! I must say they looked kind of queer when we took them out, but he said he had hopes. They hadn't risen much and he had some difficulty in breaking them open, so he hurriedly buttered it whole and smiling sweetly at me took a bite. I mean he tried to, in his sub-conscious action, to expert investigation later revealed that what I had taken for flour was a bag of calomine and the baking powder was what was left of the plaster of paris when the decorator finished the kitchen the day before!"

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Three Million Jobless Workers in U. S.

Mr. Editor: The Man Who Talks, asks in Bulletin of Nov. 23. "When the present generation of workers in mills, mines, railroads and on farms grows old—a loss of 3,000,000 workers, who will do our manual labor?" Secretary of Labor Davis, in an address in favor of the continuation of restriction of immigration to three per cent, of each nationality here, states that "the present generation of persons out of employment; why add to them by immigration?"

That is, we have three million of the working class more than are needed now and so, jobless, the Man Who Talks also entirely overlooks the natural increase of population, by excess of births over deaths, which adds several millions between the present and the year 1925.

That gives the population of the United States as 105,682,165, as compared with that of 1910, with 91,975,268. Our population is greater than that of any country in Europe, and certainly ought to be sufficient for our labor demands, without any immigration from abroad at all.

We have too many traders, too many miners too many indoor occupations, too many foreign-born persons, too many imbeciles and criminals. Hypocritical politicians, fishing for foreign votes gives us hot air, blowing that the United States is an "asylum" and for some years past it might be styled as an asylum in the sinister sense, and an almshouse for the "lame ducks" of the old world. And the real workers and the owners of real property pay the bills, in taxes, imbeciles, and criminals, we have been made a "Booby Bay" for transported or fugitive criminals, as shown by government investigation a few years ago.

Let us have "The Man Who Studies and Who Thinks."

PIMPY? WELL, DON'T BE

People Notice It. Drive Them Off with Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets.

A pimply face will not embarrass you much longer if you get a package of Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets. The skin should begin to clear after you have taken the tablets a few nights.

Cleanse the blood, bowels and liver with Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets, the successful substitute for calomel; there's no sickness or pain after taking them.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets do that which calomel does, and just as effectively, but their action is gentle and safe instead of severe and irritating.

No one who takes Olive Tablets is ever cursed with a "dark brown taste," a bad breath, a dull, listless, "no good" feeling, constipation, torpid liver, bad disposition or pimply complexion.

Olive Tablets are a purely vegetable compound mixed with olive oil; you will know them by their olive color.

Dr. Edwards spent years among patients afflicted with liver and bowel complaints and Olive Tablets are the immensely effective result. Take one or two nightly for a week. See how much better you feel and look. Be sure you get the real Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets.

"Stop!" commanded the friend who was cleaning out her bureau drawer. "I suffer so!"

"However," sighed the embroidered one, "I was much more terrible." He said no hotel cook ever could begin to approach homemade hot biscuit and that his life was practically blighted because of being permeated daily by Vienna bread with castiron crust and muffins that tasted as though a machine had turned them out in gross lots.

"It does seem as though sometimes fate is unbelievably kind to me. I did learn to make good biscuit when I visited grandmother. I had to do that or take to crocheting out in Three Corners, and the biscuits won."

"Why, Billy?" I said in a kind, sisterly tone. "It's a shame you can't have a simple treat like baking-powder biscuits! Come out to the house next Sunday night and I'll make you some biscuits that are biscuits if I do say it myself."

"I was safe in picking a Sunday night supper, because there always is a cold roast dinner and I can at least wash lettuce, and Billy is crazy about mixing dressing, and mother always has a Sunday cake baked, and the family was going out, so—"

"Perfect!" agreed her friend. "But it's a cruel thing to wreck a bachelor's life!"

"I found I had kind of forgotten about the biscuit at first and I expect it made me really nervous, especially as Billy was in the kitchen fussing around making salad dressing and admiring my housewifely appearance in that $10 art apron. IN THE PUBLIC EYE

Hale Holden, who advocates the consolidation of the western railroads into four great systems, is president of Chicago Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company. Mr. Holden is a Missourian who called Kansas City his home when he was a boy. He journeyed east to get his education, graduated at Williams college and studied at the Harvard Law school. Then Kansas City claiming him as a lawyer, and in the course of time—1903—he became an attorney for the C. B. & Q. Three years passed and he was made special assistant to the president. Two years of this service followed and then he was made a vice president. In 1914 he was elected president. That is, in seven years, by way of the law and his administrative aptitude he had won the chief office of one of the largest railroad systems in the world. At the time of his election he was the youngest executive of any of the prominent railroads of America.

CANTERBURY GREEN HAS

AN OLD FASHIONED WELL.

A Canterbury resident read with interest the Jewett City item in The Bulletin referring to the Old Fashioned Well. Another well of this sort is still in daily use by the two families living in the so-called Francis place on Canterbury Green, now owned by Arthur C. Bennett. This well now has the original drum and counter balance stone and horse head. He journeyed east to get his education, graduated at Williams college and studied at the Harvard Law school. Then Kansas City claiming him as a lawyer, and in the course of time—1903—he became an attorney for the C. B. & Q. Three years passed and he was made special assistant to the president. THEY CALLED HIM

AN "OLD PILL"

THAT was years ago when he packed a terrible grouch, a mighty irritable stomach and a liver that refused to do the things that all good lives should. No wonder his friends called him an "old pill" and stayed away.

But that was years ago—long before he discovered Beecham's Pills and learned that two at bedtime can bring sunshine into a man's life. Today, he's an optimist, a hero to his wife, and a staunch believer in Beecham's Pills.

The cheer that Beecham's Pills bring into a man's disposition, is the incomparable cheer of sound digestion, active liver, and the regular habits that make good health.

Stories That Recall Others

Wasn't An Easter Rabbit

Four year old Maria had often heard stories of the Easter rabbits and had heard of egg hunting parties where children would hunt for nests of eggs, supposed to have been hidden by the rabbits.

One day her father went hunting and on coming home was telling her of his hunt. He told of looking through a fence into a bunch of tall grass and seeing a rabbit in its nest. He took a stick and punched it out.

Maria listened with wide eyed attention, then said: "Did you break any of its eggs, daddy?"

"How About It?"

Peggy was told by her father one day not to go out of the house. Only a short time after he saw her out under the window.

"Didn't I tell you not to go out?" the father inquired.

"Oh, father," she replied, "you should see the cute little flowers growing out there."

"Yes, I have no doubt they are very pretty," replied her father. "But how about your going out when I told you not to?"

"Well," returned Peggy in the most innocent tone, "How about it?"

A woman is never sure that she is happily married until she discovers that she isn't.
